Downtown Eastside's $1-billion fix?

Transformation.
Improvement plan for coming decades will require big provincial and federal bucks

EMILY JACKSON
emily.jackson@metronews.ca

Vancouver's oldest neighbourhood is ground zero for the city's toughest issues, famous for its crippling poverty, battles over gentrification and homelessness.

Everyone agrees the Downtown Eastside has problems, yet finding solutions that welcome change and don't kick out low-income residents has been a challenge.

But after two years and 335 meetings with 5,000 participants, the city has released a $1-billion plan to improve lives in the neighbourhood where half the residents make less than $13,600 per year.

It hopes it has landed on "that good old Canadian compromise of coming down the middle," head planner Brian Jackson said to reporters Thursday.

The city envisions a revitalized Hastings Street in its 30-year plan for the Downtown Eastside, as seen in this rendering.
COURTESY LORI BROWN/MCILHARGEY/BROWN ASSOCIATES LTD.

Over the next 30 years, the plan calls for 4,400 units of new social housing and supportive housing in the neighbourhood, along with 8,850 units for homeowners. It will increase the number of low-income housing units to 12,000 from 10,000 to avoid displacement.

It aims to revitalize Hastings Street with new businesses, including many that will serve the low-income community, and rebuild Hogan's Alley if the viaducts come down.

But the ambitious plan is going to depend on the provincial and federal governments for more than half of the funding, which amounts to a cool $500 million. Still, Jackson said he believes the plan is "truly achievable." He is confident the city will be able to partner with the province, as it has done in the past with 14 housing sites.

Developers are also expected to contribute about $300 million.

Unlike other neighbourhood plans, this one doesn't involve tall towers as it's not on a rapid-transit line, Coun. Andrea Reimer said.

Heritage preservation is also critical in the community, Reimer said, as it encompasses the city's first neighbourhoods and traditional First Nations territory.

The plan was developed with a social-impact assessment, which surveyed low-income residents' hopes and fears for the neighbourhood.

The assessment mapped out community resources, including the Union Gospel Mission and the Carnegie Centre, as key assets to preserve.

Council will debate the plan on March 12.

Dude, there's my park!

Grand unveiling. Lead petitioner and park commissioner united in celebration of fun

SAM SMITH

Vancouver Park Board commissioner Sarah Blyth, left, unveils the officially approved "Dude Chilling Park" sign with lead petitioner Dustin Bromley. SAM SMITH/FOR METRO

The Dude abides, and so does the Vancouver Park Board.

It's official — the public art piece that simply read "Dude Chilling Park" at Vancouver's Guelph Park and ended up in an international media blitz, including a segment on Jimmy Kimmel Live, is here to stay.

Vancouver Park Board Commissioner Sarah Blyth unveiled the new and improved sign Thursday morning alongside Dustin Bromley, the petitioner who first pushed for the sign to remain in the park.

"It's just fun," Blyth said. "I think people will come and see it. Anyone I talk to in Vancouver knows about it.... It's one of those things that make a city unique."

The process took a little more than a year since Viktor Briestensky first placed the sign in the park.

Since then, more than 3,000 people signed Bromley's petition to have it stay. When it became obvious the neighbourhood was in full support, the Vancouver Park Board decided to not only keep the sign but improve it to ensure it survived the times.

"The other sign, it wouldn't have held up with the weather," Blyth said. "It's not a big deal for us to make something that would last."

Bromley happily spoke to media on Thursday morning touting this as a success for the local community.

"When (Briestensky) installed the sign it captured the sense of fun around this neighbourhood, and when I originally made the petition it was in the same vein of fun," Bromley said. "But then I saw the amazing support from the neighbourhood and it inspired me and it made me want to keep going with this."

Bromley and Blyth unveiled the sign together, removing the cloth to reveal a sign that looks just like any other official park sign.

Before media wrapped up and left, Bromley told his group of friends, "I forgot to say: 'The dudes may chill.'"

Woman makes bucket list for dying dog

Riina Cooke and Romeo. FACEBOOK

It's never easy to watch a loved one depart from this world, even if it is a family pet.

But for Coquitlam's Riina Cooke, when she found out in November that her then-eight-year-old boxer named Romeo had osteosarcoma — a cancer that literally bursts the bone from the inside-out — in his left-hind leg, she decided to help him live his last few months to the fullest.

"It's his ninth birthday today," Cooke said on Thursday. "We didn't think he was going to make it this far."

In celebration, Cooke took Romeo for a paw-dicure, followed by doggy ice cream at Rocky Point Park and finally a small jaunt around the area.

Cooke has posted Romeo's journey so far on Facebook, starting with small things like getting him a McDonald's cheeseburger, travelling out to his favourite trails and taking the time to reminisce.

What started small quickly grew, and in the past couple months Romeo has met Bif Naked and was even treated to a special steak dinner made by The Keg. Romeo also had the chance to ride in a fire truck and a police cruiser.

This weekend Cooke is planning to throw a party for Romeo at Lafarge Lake and is inviting her friends and their pups from the Rescue A Boxer organization.

Facilities. B.C. recycling companies teaming up

When consumers are done with packaging, whether it's aerosol cans, coffee cups or milk cartons, industry wants it back.

Three recycling companies have joined together to process and resell all recyclable goods in the province, Multi-Material B.C. announced Thursday.

Called Green By Nature, it will invest $32 million to build two highly efficient recycling facilities to deal with tough material, including Styrofoam. It will process 185,000 tonnes of packaging and printed paper after it's been collected from curbsides across the province.

It's all part of a new recycling regime coming to B.C. in May that shifts the cost of recycling from taxpayers to the businesses that produce the waste in the first place.

Led by industry-funded Multi-Material B.C., the $85-million system has a goal of recovering 75 per cent of packaging and printed paper waste. Right now, 50 per cent goes to the landfill.

Residents will be able to recycle things like plant pots and plastic film packaging and will get a break on their utility fees.

In Vancouver, utility rates are expected to drop by $5 to $27 under the new system. In 2015, the fees are expected to be even lower.

Taxi confessions. What would you (really) do?

Play Taxi Media, the national network of in-taxi touchscreens, surveyed over 4,500 men and women challenging them on certain moral dilemmas. Below are the results:

If someone dropped a $50 dollar bill, what would you do? 67 per cent believe it's better to give than to receive, while 38 per cent say they would give it back to its owner and 29 per cent would hand it over to a person in need.

If an acquaintance was about to get engaged to an unfaithful partner, what would you do? 33 per cent of men and women admit they would "mind their business" and wish them the best. However, women seem a bit more strategic with an additional 26 per cent reporting they'd tell a mutual friend in hopes that the message makes it to the bride/groom to be.

If a teen (16+) asked you to buy them alcohol for money what would you do? 51 per cent of men and 42 per cent of women believe Canada's alcohol laws are too strict.

When Friday comes around and you have a choice between spending time with your best friend or your significant other, who would you choose? 80 per cent of men and 76 per cent of women choose their BFFs.

Cable ferry to warm up the Shipyards

$15M contract. Seaspan president says build signals rebirth of stagnant industry

Seaspan's Vancouver Shipyards were awarded a $15-million contract Thursday to build a cable ferry that will run between Buckley Bay and Denman Island. KENDRA WONG/METRO FILE

Seaspan promises Vancouver's shipbuilding industry is back in a big way after winning the right to build a cable ferry between Buckley Bay and Denman Island.

BC Ferries awarded Vancouver Shipyards with the $15 million contract on Thursday, with Seaspan beating out one other Canadian and one American company for the project.

Construction of the 78.5-metre cable ferry, expected to be in operation by the summer of 2015, begins in June.

Once complete, the ferry will be able to carry up to 50 vehicles and 150 passengers.

While the cable ferry isn't considered a large or complex project, it gives the shipyard — currently undergoing a $200 million modernization — a good warm-up before construction begins in October on 17 vessels as part of a multi-year, multi-billion contract to provide new ships to the Royal Canadian Navy and Canadian Coast Guard under the National Shipbuilding Procurement Strategy (NSPS).

The influx of work means Seaspan is looking to increase its production team to 1,000 employees from 150 over the coming years — signalling the rebirth of a local industry that's been stagnant for decades.

"It's all about jobs," said Seaspan Shipyards president Brian Carter. "There's a very good story happening here. We're rebuilding our shipbuilding capability in B.C. and Canada after it's limped along in the '60s, '70s and '80s. Now the industry can rebuild itself."

Seaspan won't be hiring additional workers for the ferry contract, but Carter said the project will help it test its new capacity and "ramp up" before beginning work on the first of three offshore science fisheries vessels under the NSPS contract in October.

"It's a perfect fit for us," Carter said of the BC Ferries contract. "It's slightly more complex than the barges we're building in the yard, so it lets us ramp up (for the NSPS contract)."

The NSPS contract — worth $7.3 billion — is expected to keep the North Vancouver-based shipyard busy for the next 10 to 15 years.

Carter said it hopes to lure skilled B.C. workers to the shipyard who currently have to leave their communities to work on energy projects in Alberta, Northeast B.C. and the North.

Construction, welding and pipefitting skills are completely transferable and well suited to shipbuilding, Carter added.

The shipyard's plate is so full these days, it has decided to withdraw from the competition to build three new intermediate class vessels after winning the cable ferry contract.

"We really wanted to make sure we had the capacity and with the NSPS work coming up, it would be irresponsible for us to take up more," Carter said.

It's a "high-grade problem" to have for an industry that isn't just treading water anymore. MATT KIELTYKA/METRO

Men with backpacks of meth nabbed, cops say

Two men were caught in Abbotsford with alleged backpacks full of methamphetamine in a co-ordinated sting with the U.S. Border Patrol and the Abbotsford Police Department.

The incident happened around 8:45 p.m. Wednesday night when the U.S. Border Patrol contacted local police about two border runners driving into the Abbotsford area.

"(APD) Patrol Division officers and a K9 unit immediately moved into the area," APD stated in a press release. "They were quickly assisted by the Air 1 police helicopter and Integrated Road Safety Unit officers who were working in Abbotsford."

The men, aged 23 and 49, were captured in southeast Abbotsford and are currently being held by APD for Canadian Immigration officials. The backpacks contained approximately 20 kg of suspected methamphetamine. SAM SMITH/FOR METRO

Simulated mission to Mars. Kelowna scientist to spend four months in a sealed dome on a mountainside

A Kelowna scientist is joining the crew of a NASA-funded simulated mission to Mars after beating out hundreds of applicants from around the world.

Ross Lockwood and five others will spend four months inside a sealed environment high on the slopes of a Hawaiian mountain.

The main purpose of the mission, starting March 28, is to help the space agency develop psychological guidelines that will be used to select future astronauts capable of making a real trip to Mars.

Quoted

"You just have to live your life hoping that, if an interesting door opens, you can maybe sneak your foot in there before it closes."

Scientist Ross Lockwood, on the possibility of one day becoming an astronaut.

"It's incredibly exciting to participate in a research project that will be used to help in space exploration," Lockwood said. "I'm really looking forward to this, but I'm also a little bit nervous as well."

Lockwood, 27, is doing his doctorate in condensed matter physics at the University of Alberta. Along with his long-time interest in space-related research and astronomy, Lockwood has worked in educational programs at the University of Alberta Observatory.

His scientific background and experience in various university leadership roles helped him succeed in his application to participate in the simulated Mars mission, which is led by the University of Hawaii.

The researchers will enter the 11-metre diameter dome built in an old rock quarry at an elevation of 2,500 metres on the slopes of Mauna Loa.

The researchers will emerge occasionally from their sealed environment, wearing simulated space suits, to take volcanic soil samples, map the rocky terrain, and replicate other tasks that will likely be done by future astronauts on Mars.

Teens too cool with driving high: Study

Smoking pot and driving is not as bad as drinking and driving, say a third of Canadian teens.

Thirty-two per cent of teens polled do not consider driving while high as big a threat as driving drunk, according to a study done by Partnership For a Drug-Free Canada.

"There is a clear understanding of the dangers of drunk driving by drivers of all ages," the study states. "However ... there are significant percentages of young people ... who are confused or unaware that driving while under the influence of prescription or illegal drugs ... can also seriously affect their driving capabilities."

B.C. looks to blaze trails in AIDS fight

Treatment as Prevention. 'The more people you treat, the fewer new infections you'll see,' says B.C. Centre researcher

MATT KIELTYKA
matt.kieltyka@metronews.ca

Dr. Bohdan Nosyk CONTRIBUTED

British Columbia will continue to push the boundaries of effective HIV/AIDS treatment, according to the researcher tasked with squeezing the most out of the health care system.

Dr. Bohdan Nosyk, a researcher at the B.C. Centre of Excellence in HIV/AIDS and SFU health sciences associate professor, was named the first St. Paul's Hospital CANFAR Chair in HIV/AIDS Research on Thursday.

Working in the developing field of health economics, Nosyk will use the $3-million research chair to improve the well-being of HIV patients and to find the most cost-effective and efficient ways of fighting the disease.

The province has already seen significant cost benefits in tackling HIV/AIDS with widespread testing and giving patients access to highly active antiretroviral therapy to reduce viral loads and cut the spread of the disease.

And while many nations have adopted the award-winning practice, known as Treatment as Prevention, it has yet to catch on federally in Canada.

Nosyk sees making a national case for effective treatment, by looking at it through a statistical and mathematic lens, as part of his new position.

"We're supported by (the Canadian Foundation for AIDS Research), which is a national organization, so it lets us communicate our work better beyond British Columbia," Nosyk told Metro. "The more people you treat, the fewer new infections you'll see and it translates to significant savings."

The only way to do that is to continue blazing trails at home.

Working with SFU, St. Paul's Hospital, health authorities and even some U.S. partners, Nosyk's team will research health outcomes and costs for HIV/AIDS treatment, collect empirical evidence and extrapolate long-term costs to help develop the most effective treatments.

"We want to continue to be world leaders," he said. "The message is not about cost, but about value. We want to squeeze the most out of every dollar."

Long-term care and the costs associated with that will also be studied as people with HIV/AIDS are living longer lives than ever, leading to a brand new set of challenges — though Nosyk is the first to consider that a "happy twist."

Treatment as Prevention in B.C. has lead to a decline in HIV-related morbidity and mortality by over 90 per cent since 1995.

Bus killer granted unescorted town trips

Vince Li. Board grants man who beheaded fellow passenger on Manitoba bus freedom to travel to nearby town without supervision

A man who beheaded a fellow passenger on a Greyhound bus in Manitoba will soon be allowed to leave a mental hospital without an escort.

Thursday's ruling by the Criminal Code Review Board means Vince Li will be on his own in public for the first time since he stabbed Tim McLean and then ate parts of his body six years ago.

The board granted Li all the new freedoms his psychiatric team had requested at a hearing earlier this week. Lead psychiatrist Dr. Steven Kremer said Li, a schizophrenic, has stopped experiencing delusions and is a non-violent patient.

Instead of the supervised outings Li had been granted previously, he will be allowed unescorted trips from the Selkirk Mental Health Centre into the nearby city of Selkirk. The visits, to begin next Thursday, are to start at 30 minutes and increase to full days.

As well, Li's supervision on outings to other communities — including Winnipeg — will be relaxed. He is to be part of a group without a staff member dedicated to monitoring him.

Li is also to be moved to an unlocked ward at the hospital from the secure wing where he has been kept.

For McLean's mother, the changes were an outrage.

"We're not surprised. We're very disappointed, embarrassed, ashamed," Carol DeDelley said.

"I ultimately do not believe that when you take a life, you have the right to freedom any longer."

Loretta Saunders. Two charged with murder in death of Halifax student

Halifax police charged a man and woman with first-degree murder Thursday in the death of Loretta Saunders, a university student whose body was found a day earlier on the side of a New Brunswick highway.

Police say Victoria Henneberry, 28, and Blake Leggette, 25, will face the charges in Halifax provincial court Friday.

Supt. Jim Perrin of Halifax Regional Police said police believe Saunders was killed in the city on the day she was last seen on Feb. 13.

"I can't get into the evidence because now the case is before the courts. For first-degree murder there has to be some planning to the crime and our investigators are satisfied that existed and that's why the appropriate charges were laid today," he said.

"What led the investigators to laying charges today is the totality of evidence from the time the case was reported to the last several days." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Business owner fighting Quebec language law in Facebook fracas

Eva Cooper plans to fight Quebec's tough language laws.
TREVOR GREENWAY/METRO IN OTTAWA

A business owner is fighting Quebec's tough language laws after she was ordered to translate her company Facebook page into French.

Eva Cooper, owner of Delilah in the Parc, in Chelsea, Que., received a letter from Quebec's language cops claiming that she had violated section 52 of Bill 101 and that she must translate the page into French to comply with the law. Cooper said the reaches of Bill 101 have stretched too far and she's ready to fight.

"I am not going to take this lying down. It's about all of us," said Cooper from her Delilah in the Glebe location in Ottawa.

"This isn't pornography, this isn't hate mail, this isn't blackmail, I mean there is nothing bad about what we are doing," she said. "Isn't it a form of communication?"

Cooper has until March 10 to respond to the letter, or she could face legal action.

Airport seized by

Ukraine. Tensions have caused the country's finances to plummet, prompting a potential emergency financial package

Dozens of armed men in military uniforms seized an airport in the capital of Ukraine's strategic Crimea region early Friday, a report said, but a later report cited an airport official as saying the men apologized and left after finding no Ukrainian troops had landed.

Witnesses told the Interfax news agency that the 50 or so men were wearing the same gear as the ones who seized government buildings in the city, Simferopol, on Thursday and raised the Russian flag.

The report said the men with "Russian Navy ensigns" first surrounded the Simferopol Airport's domestic flights terminal.

The events in the Crimea region have heightened tensions with neighbouring Russia, which scrambled fighter jets to patrol borders in the first stirrings of a potentially dangerous confrontation reminiscent of Cold War brinksmanship.

Moscow granted shelter to Ukraine's fugitive president, Viktor Yanukovych, state media said. He was said to be holed up in a luxury government retreat and to have scheduled a news conference Friday near the Ukrainian border.

As gunmen wearing unmarked camouflage uniforms erected a sign reading "Crimea is Russia" in the provincial capital, Ukraine's interim prime minister declared the Black Sea territory "has been and will be a part of Ukraine."

The escalating conflict sent Ukraine's finances plummeting further, prompting Western leaders to prepare an emergency financial package.

Yanukovych finally fled by helicopter last week as his allies deserted him.

Human rights violation. Report predicted unrest in Ukraine

A chemical weapons attack in Syria last summer that the U.S. says killed more than 1,400 people was the world's worst human rights violation of 2013, the Obama administration concluded Thursday.

The report by the State Department also foreshadowed the unrest in Ukraine that just toppled its government.

The survey singled out some countries that appear regularly in this annual roundup of abuses: Iran, for manipulation of elections and civil liberties restrictions; North Korea, for rampant reports of extrajudicial killings, detentions, and torture; and Belarus, for beatings of protesters and lack of checks and balances by the authoritarian government.

But the department said the Aug. 21 chemical weapons attack on the Damascus suburbs in Syria was "one of many horrors in a civil war filled with countless crimes against humanity," including the torture and murder of prisoners, and the targeting of civilians with barrel bombs and Scud missiles.

North Korea launches missiles in protest, say officials

North Korea fired four suspected short-range missiles into its eastern waters Thursday, South Korean defence officials said, in an apparent effort to protest ongoing U.S.-South Korean military exercises that Pyongyang calls a rehearsal for invasion.

The launches, however, weren't expected to raise tension as North Korea routinely tests short-range missiles and it has recently sought better ties with South Korea in what outside analysts say is an attempt to win badly-needed foreign investment and aid.

The officials said they were trying to learn exactly what North Korea launched and that South Korea has bolstered its monitoring on North Korea.

Same-sex marriage

Kentucky the latest win for gay rights advocates

A federal judge signed an order Thursday directing officials in Kentucky to immediately recognize same-sex marriages performed in other states and countries, capping a hectic 24 hours in the battle over gay rights that is raging across America.

The Kentucky decision was just the latest victory for gay rights advocates.

A federal judge on Wednesday declared a same-sex marriage ban in deeply conservative Texas unconstitutional, handing same-sex marriage proponents their biggest victory yet — pending an appeal that will likely go to the U.S. Supreme Court. It followed similar recent decisions in Utah, Oklahoma and Virginia.

Cold War redux on the horizon?

An American classic car drives past the Russian warship the Viktor Leonov CCB-175, docked in Havana, Cuba, Thursday. Britain spied on webcams: NSA leaks

Report. Yahoo calls news British spy agency stole screenshots of intimate videos 'a whole new level of violation' of users' privacy, if true

Britain's signals intelligence division is stealing screenshots from hundreds of thousands of innocent Yahoo users' webcam videos, according to the Guardian newspaper, which also reported that the years-long operation has swept up a huge haul of intimate photographs.

The newspaper said GCHQ has been scooping up the sensitive images by intercepting video chats such as the kind offered by Yahoo Messenger, an effort codenamed OPTIC NERVE. It's not clear how many Yahoo users were spied on in this way. The Guardian said that in one six-month period in 2008, GCHQ intercepted the video communications of 1.8 million users, but it's possible that the program, which the Guardian says was still active in 2012, has either grown or shrunk in scope since then.

If the program expanded, millions more could have had their video communications intercepted. Yahoo Messenger had 75 million users worldwide in late 2011, according to an estimate by digital analytics company comScore, although numbers have fallen steadily since then.

The Guardian said the documents were provided by former U.S. intelligence worker Edward Snowden, who remains in Russia after having sought temporary asylum there.

If confirmed, the newspaper's report would represent "a whole new level of violation of our users' privacy," Yahoo Inc. said in a written statement. The Sunnyvale, Calif.-based company said it was unaware of such snooping and would never condone it, calling on governments across the world to reform their surveillance practices.

B.C. Tories take federal Tories to task over mine

Two veteran Conservative MPs are speaking out against their own government after a proposal for a billion-dollar gold and copper mine in British Columbia was rejected by Ottawa for a second time.

Federal Environment Minister Leona Aglukkaq announced late Wednesday that she has rejected the $1.5-billion plan from Taseko Mines Ltd. over environmental concerns. A broad range of opponents celebrated the decision, including the Sierra Club and the Council of Canadians.

But Conservative MPs Dick Harris and Cathy McLeod both publicly objected. Harris said he felt "a little bit of despair" about a decision, which shatters the hopes of thousands of people in the Cariboo-Chilcotin region he represents.

1 Piers Morgan. Social media went nuts this week when it was announced CNN was ending Piers Morgan's show next month due to poor ratings. The majority seemed fully in support of the decision to axe the show. I for one find his interview style refreshing and transparent, and his ranting on gun control laws — while tiring to some — bang on. I say move Anderson Cooper into the 9 p.m. slot now.

2 #PinkShirtDay #StopBullying. People standing up to bullies — while wearing pink — was trending across Canada this week in a beautiful show of solidarity against bullying on Pink Shirt Day on Wednesday. Whether it's in the schoolyard, home, workplace or online, we all know someone who has been bullied. The more awareness (and action) on this social issue, the better.

3 Harold Ramis. The world of comedy lost a gem — his writing classics included Animal House and Groundhog Day — when he passed away at the age of 69, and online tributes flowed in. It's his co-starring role in the Ghostbuster movies he'll likely be most remembered for. Indeed, a Twitter picture showing a tribute to him outside the Ghostbusters firehouse in Tribeca (Twinkie included!) was shared all over the interwebs.

4 AC/DC symphony. It's perhaps the best mashup of classical music meets classic rock ever: Croatian string duo 2Cellos did an amazing cover of AC/DC's Thunderstruck, performed in full period setting. It has four million views on YouTube. I want more. I want the 2Cellos to do Stairway to Heaven, Bohemian Rhapsody, Sweet Child O'Mine and Smells Like Teen Spirit. Shake me all night long with that.

5 #WeAreSpring, please. #WeAreWinter was a fantastic, empowering promo for the Canadian Olympic team during the Winter Olympics but that's over (and we did amazing!), yet the frigid temperatures still remain. I can speak for everyone when I say we are kinda getting sick of shovelling. So I propose it's time to bring out a #WeAreSpring campaign where we encourage Mother Nature to show us some heat! Bring it with that hashtag.

6 Coldplay. With no context, Coldplay released an eerie, frosty, dark new video titled Midnight this week that felt more like a Radiohead song. But dropping stuff with zero context is the new I'm-going-to-build-so-much-hype-behind-this-product-before-it's-released-you-won't-believe-it! So it makes total sense, actually.

7 Anchorman 2. On Feb. 28, Anchorman 2: The Legend Continues is being re-released in theatres for one week only with 763 new jokes. A movie that had so much improvisation had plenty to choose from and these new ones have risen from the cutting room floor. So now, watch out on social media as movie-goers tweet out their fave new Ron Burgundy lines.

8 Oscars. With the 86th Academy Awards Sunday night, the biggest social media action will be on what returning host Ellen has to say in her opening monologue, and what the stars are wearing on the red carpet. The actual awards are secondary — though if Barkhad Abdi from Captain Phillips doesn't win best actor in a supporting role, I'll be kicking up a Twitter storm.

Batman stars in new toy story

Dark Knight's head made of recyclables

It looks like Batman has gone all soft – he's made out of toys. Sculptor Freya Jobbins created this bust of the Caped Crusader using old figurines, with a baby doll belly as his chin. "My work explores the relationship between consumerist fetishism and the emerging recycling culture within the visual arts," says Jobbins. METRO

Artist's viewpoint

"I begin my work by finding toys in second-hand shops and recycling centres. As I build a base layer of toys and doll parts, the persona of the bust starts to evolve." Freya Jobbins

So many items

- "I love the actual process of hunting for the discarded toys, but to find so many of them unwanted, still in perfectly good condition, really shocks me," Jobbins said.

Seth Rogen and his partner-in-crime Evan Goldberg's next announced project is a movie version of Console Wars, an upcoming book about the knock-down, drag-out brawl between Sega and Nintendo of the '90s. But there's no need to wait for either to refresh your memories of a pixelated rivalry.

TORY WALKER/FLICKR

Nesbox:
Brush up on the Nintendo side of the war by browsing through a playable library of NES and SNES games that is hundreds deep. Classic RPGs, beat-em-up brawlers and patience-grinding platformers. Not to mention the mighty and beloved Earthbound. (nesbox.com)

Ssega:
Look, fan boys. It's quite easy to love the offerings of both companies. There's no need for rival camps. However, as you're working your way through proven classics like Aladdin, Beyond Oasis and Sonic Spinball (that's right, Spinball), you'll find we can all agree that most of the music was terrible. (ssega.com)

The Console Wars:
If the games themselves cause your eyes to glaze over, there's still a magnificent yarn full of insider intrigue, corporate betrayal and tumbles from the throne. The full book is a few weeks away from release, but Exposé has a pretty great primer that may pique your interest. (xmedia.ex.ac.uk)

Synopsis

Liam Neeson joins the mile-high club in Non-Stop. He plays Bill Marks, an aging U.S. federal air marshal safe-guarding the 150 passengers, including Julianne Moore, Corey Stoll, Linus Roache and flight attendant Lupita Nyong'o, on an international flight from New York to London. He's also a burn-out, a lonely guy with a loaded gun and a propensity to get loaded on booze. The routine flight becomes fraught with danger when he receives text messages from a mysterious source threatening to kill a passenger every 20 minutes unless a ransom of $150 million is deposited into a bank account. When that account is discovered to be in Marks's name, he's accused of being a hijacker.

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

Just plane outrageous

Non-Stop. Liam Neeson's acting is the only thing that saves this from a crash landing

Richard: Mark, Non-Stop has more red herrings than a fish and chips shop. Clues are dropped and discarded and the plot is so ludicrous that every now and again someone has to say, "I can explain this," so the audience has a fighting chance of making some kind of sense of the intrigue. The story is simple but is muddied by outrageous twists. Once I decided to not try and play along — this isn't True Detective where every word and scene counts — I enjoyed watching Neeson in action man mode. He's better than the movie and he made this movie better simply by showing up.

Mark: Richard, I liked the movie in spite of itself. I did play along right to the end, and enjoyed the ride. But it's this Agatha Christie-like cheesiness that keeps threatening to sink the picture. And the answer to the movie's riddle was far from satisfying. It felt tacked on and graceless. Neeson is great, but he's getting so old for this sort of thing. Soon he's going to have to chase after the bad guys with a walker.

RC: You wouldn't say that if he was after you! Walker or no walker, the old boy has some life in him yet. There is a certain cheesy joy to be found in the image of Neeson floating in zero gravity, grabbing a gun out of the air and getting business done. He has carved a unique action niche for himself and seems to be having fun growling and gunning his way through trashy action movies.

MB: And what about Julianne Moore? What's her excuse? Mortgage payments? She was actually the one passenger I didn't believe in for a moment. I kept thinking, "Why is Julianne Moore in this picture?' And like everyone else, she gets to do an emotional speech that proves she couldn't be the villain. Which, of course, may or may not be the case. I know you liked Neeson's zero gravity gun grab, but I also liked his fist fight in the airplane lavatory. Shot in such close quarters, it was very exciting.

RC: I hope Moore buys something nice with the pay cheque. She gets the job done, but that part could have been played by anyone. I feel bad for Lupita Nyong'o. She's an Oscar nominee for 12 Years a Slave, but here she's reduced to a Grace Jones impersonator with just a few lines.

MB: Weirdly, I did not feel very emotionally involved with the movie. Maybe because so much of the plot depends on texting, or maybe because the characters keep yammering on, Non-Stop, about their backstory.

Did you know

- Meryl Streep's nod for best actress in August: Osage County marks her 18th Oscar nomination, breaking the record for most nominations earned by an actor or actress, previously held by ... Meryl Streep.
- If Jennifer Lawrence wins for best supporting actress in American Hustle she'll become the youngest person to win two acting Oscars. She'd also be the first actress to win back-to-back awards in different categories and with the same director.
- This year marks only the second time that Pixar has released a film (Monsters University) that hasn't earned a best animated picture nomination. The first was 2011's Cars 2.
- Best actor nominee Leonardo DiCaprio and best actress nominee Amy Adams are currently tied at five career nominations and zero wins each.
- With his nomination for The Book Thief's soundtrack, John Williams extends his ridiculous lead as the living person with the most Oscar nods, at 49. If you factor in the deceased, he's catching up to 60-time nominee Walt Disney.
- Frozen composer Bobby Lopez, one of the songwriters nominated for best song favourite Let It Go, would become the 12th person in show business history to achieve the EGOT — winning an Emmy, a Grammy, an Oscar and a Tony.
- Ellen DeGeneres reprises her role as the ceremony's host, following her last turn at the gig in 2007. She's got a long way to go to get into the record books though, as Bob Hope holds the lead with 19 hosting appearances.

Your guide to the Oscars

86th Academy Awards. Here's what to look out for during Sunday's ceremony, hosted by Ellen DeGeneres

Returning producers Neil Meron and Craig Zadan say the theme for this year's Oscars is a salute to heroes and heroines of all stripes, celebrating everything from Norma Rae and Captain Phillips to Harry Potter and the Ghostbusters. There will also be a segment celebrating the 75th anniversary of the Wizard of Oz.

Music will be a big part of the ceremony, which is great considering so many big names are nominated in the best song category and performances of the nominated songs were skipped altogether in 2010 and 2012.

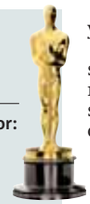
U2 (Mandela: Long Walk to Freedom), Pharrell Williams (Despicable Me 2), Karen O (Her) and Idina Menzel (Frozen) will all take the stage, as will Pink and Bette Midler for other performances.

But host DeGeneres has already insisted that she herself won't be singing, unlike last year's host, Seth MacFarlane.

With 46 famous faces presenting over the course of the night, it's going to be a busy stage. Presenters include previous winners like Jennifer Lawrence, Christoph Waltz, Kevin Spacey and Angelina Jolie, plus popular names like Zac Efron, Channing Tatum and Kristen Bell. One we're definitely excited about is Vertigo star Kim Novak, making a rare public appearance at the ceremony.

This marks the 13th year the Oscars have been presented in the same venue, though the name has changed. What was the Kodak Theatre up until 2011 is now known as the Dolby Theatre. And if the ceremony feels long, just be thankful it's not 2000 anymore. That year, the proceedings clocked in at a whopping four hours and four minutes, while they generally average around three-and-a-half hours long. The first Oscars in 1929, by the way, lasted 15 minutes. If only.

Last-minute predictions



We're going ahead and calling most of the races all locked up, but there is still room for surprises. Best supporting actress and best picture seem particularly hard to pin down. But we're pinning them down anyway! If you win your office pool with this, we get a cut, OK?

A few good reads

The books behind the films

If you're looking for some good reading material, the Academy's best adapted screenplay category is a good place to start, but you'll be searching bookstores in vain for the book behind Before Midnight. The screenplay for the movie is an adaptation because it's based on the characters from previous films Before Sunrise and Before Sunset. Still, you can always cozy up with these:

• A Captain's Duty: Somali Pirates, Navy SEALs and Dangerous Days at Sea, the book by Richard Phillips (with co-writer Stephan Talty) became Captain Phillips, with Tom Hanks stepping in to portray Phillips' hijacking by Somali pirates.

• The Lost Child of Philomena Lee by Martin Sixsmith obviously became Philomena, starring Dame Judi Dench as Lee and Steve Coogan as former BBC presenter Sixsmith.

• 12 Years a Slave, the harrowing 1853 memoir of Solomon Northup, was originally published with the subtitle "Narrative of Solomon Northup, citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington city in 1841, rescued in 1853 from a cotton plantation near the Red River in Louisiana," which, honestly, is a total spoiler.

• Reading Jordan Belfort's own accounts of his exploits in the memoir The Wolf of Wall Street might help illuminate why the film's chronicle of bad behavior seemed so infatuated with its subject, who earned a tidy $1 million for the movie rights.

• Over in the best documentary category, you can pick up Jeremy Scahill's Dirty Wars: The World is a Battlefield if you want to learn more about the nominated film Dirty Wars.

And the Oscar for best cocktail goes to ...

It's an unusually crowded field for this year's best picture contest, but thankfully our vice isn't gambling. Instead, we raise a glass to three of our favourite 2013 nominees. Serve these and everyone goes home a winner!

TEXT BY JOE HOWELL, PHOTOGRAPHY BY JOANNA BALCERAK

I'm the Captain Now

- 1 oz Captain Morgan Dark Rum
- 1 oz Sailor Jerry Spiced Navy Rum
- 4 oz ginger beer
- 3 lime wedges
- 2 dashes Angostura Bitters

Build in a Collins glass with ice.

We salute Captain Phillips with this take on a seaworthy classic, the Dark 'n' Stormy. Originally just rum and ginger beer, the drink hails from the heyday of the Royal Navy, when sailors got a daily ration of rum and the Navy opened a ginger beer plant in Bermuda, purportedly to wean those same sailors off the hard stuff. Of course, the scallywags just combined the two instead.

The Russian Satellite

- 1.5 oz Stolichnaya Vodka
- .75 oz Kahlúa
- .25 oz pure lemon juice
- 2 dashes Bittermens Xocolatl Mole Bitters
- 1 dash Fernet Branca
- White tapioca pearls

Shake and strain into a brandy snifter, pack with ice, and scatter pearls on top.

The famous Black Russian — simply vodka and Kahlúa — is older than the space station Mir before they finally decommissioned the space wreck. In this twist we hail Gravity: the cocktail is still sweet and likeable, but thanks to the lemon and Fernet has a bit of edge, like George Clooney in pretty much all his roles.

The Bamboozeler

- 1.5 oz pineapple juice
- 1 oz coconut cream
- .75 oz Appleton VX
- .75 oz Malibu Rum
- 75 oz Blue Curaçao
- .50 oz lime juice

Shake hard with ice and strain into a stemmed martini glass. Garnish with a homemade cocktail umbrella.

"I don't care, I break the rules," says Bradley Cooper in American Hustle. With its neon hue and garish garnish, this libation definitely disregards modern cocktail conventions. But in the era of Hustle, sexy, gaudy drinks were de rigueur.

The Liong King man has gone to the dogs

Mr. Peabody & Sherman hits theatres next Friday. CONTRIBUTED

Mr. Peabody & Sherman. Rob Minkoff brings back a beagle he loved as a child and makes a smart, funny film in the process

scene@metronews.ca

Rob Minkoff may always be best known as the co-director of The Lion King, one of the biggest animated hits of all time, but long before he brought Simba, Mufasa and Scar to life, he was a fan of a dog named Mr. Peabody.

Mr. Peabody is a beagle in the world of humans — imagine Family Guy's Brian with less attitude but more PhDs. He's a Harvard grad, a Nobel Prize winner, advisor to heads of state and in his spare time he invented planking and auto tune. With his adopted human son Sherman, he's also a time traveller, taking the WABAC machine — "It's not WHERE we're going, but WHEN!" — to various spots in history in a weekly segment on the show Rocky and His Friends called Peabody's Improbable History.

"Whenever it came on, I would watch it," says Minkoff, director of the new animated film Mr. Peabody & Sherman, "so I've seen all the episodes multiple times. "I was always a fan but I don't recall thinking, 'Oh, that would make a great movie one day.' It didn't occur to me that way. It all started 12 years ago with a conversation I had with (executive producer) Jason Clark. He came to me and said, 'What do you think of Mr. Peabody and Sherman?' My answer was, 'I love them.' He said, 'What about making a movie out of them.' I thought, 'They're great characters. There's a lot to them. There is an unexplored well of stuff, like the time machine and time travel.'"

That was 12 years ago. "Once you get your teeth into something creatively," he says, "you never really let go."

The film retains the eccentricity of the original series: It's probably the only kid's movie with an Oedipal joke. But Minkoff hopes the movie will appeal to all ages.

"The original show was always popular among college educated, smarter people, and that was something we thought was important but at the same time, we wanted to) make it kid friendly."

Presented in IMAX 3D, the scale of the battle contrasts dramatically with the human drama.

Girls star Driver tipped to play new Stars Wars VII villain

MELINDA TAUB
Metro World News

Some days, it's good to have a face like a handsome alien. Adam Driver, the Girls star who looks like the love child of sexy and weird, is putting those unconventional good looks to excellent use: He's close to signing a deal to play a villain in the upcoming Star Wars: Episode VII, according to Variety. Sources say his character will be in the vein of Darth Vader.

Apparently, the only holdup was his Girls shooting schedule, but surely Hannah and Marnie's Brooklynite fretting is no match for the power of the Force. Although breathless casting rumours have swirled around just about every Hollywood male since the J.J. Abrams-directed reboot was announced, nothing has been confirmed yet, including for Driver — not by the Star Wars people, anyhow. Driver's co-star and boss Lena Dunham seems pretty sure he's got the job.

"We're VERY proud of Adam Driver re: Star Wars. He's about to rip a hole in da force. Is that a thing? I guess I should see those movies?" she tweeted on Feb. 26.

OK, maybe she's not totally sure, because she followed that up with a second tweet: "I confirm nothing bc I know nothing bc I'm on a plane with my dad! I just like Adam more than almost anyone, and JJ Abrams a whole lot too."

It's a good week for the Girls gang: another one of Driver's co-stars, Allison Williams, just got engaged to boyfriend Ricky Van Veen, who is a co-founder of the comedy website CollegeHumor.

Liquid Assets

The best wine goes to...

LIQUID ASSETS
Peter Rockwell
@therealwineguy
liquidassets@eastlink.ca

For the first time in years I can say I've seen most of the movies nominated for the Best Picture Oscar. Sadly, not one of them speaks to the wine community.

It looks like I'll have to wait until The Billionaire's Vinegar, the story of the world's most expensive bottle of wine, hits theatres. Brad Pitt is set to star.

If you're wondering what my favourite wine movies are, here are my top picks:

Sideways: The brilliant Academy Award winner that made pinot noir a superstar.

Bottle Shock: Upstart Americans take on the French in a sniff, swirl and spit contest that ... well, I won't ruin the ending.

A Good Year: Russell Crowe inherits a French winery in Provence and his ego gets crushed just like his grapes.

Somm: A doc that will have you shedding a tear at the trials and tribulations of becoming a sommelier.

For me, the Oscars are an appetizer event and the refreshing varietal fruit of the Fat Bastard 2012 Chardonnay ($13.46 - $15.99) makes for a food-friendly date to the big show. PRICES REFLECT RANGE ACROSS THE COUNTRY. SOME PRODUCTS MAY NOT BE AVAILABLE IN ALL PROVINCES.

DON'T LET COLD OR FLU SLOW YOU DOWN

HOW TO SAFEGUARD YOUR FAMILY

Sneezes, sniffles, or coughing fits can put a serious wrench into daily life.

Do you know the best ways to help prevent the flu? This year, help safeguard your family against illnesses with the following tips for cold and flu season.

BOOST YOUR IMMUNE SYSTEM

A healthy immune system is the best protection against cold and flu season. Keep your family's natural defences strong with these simple tactics:

• Avoid stress. Studies show that stress hampers your ability to stay healthy, especially during cold and flu season, so anything you can do to combat stress helps fight germs. Try taking a mini meditation break during the day — simply close your eyes and focus on breathing in and out for a few minutes.

• Get plenty of sleep. When you consistently log eight hours of sleep a night, your body has the chance to repair cells and build up your immune system.

• Eat right and exercise. Stock up on fruits and vegetables to give your body the nutrients it needs. Also, shoot for 30 minutes of moderate activity at least three times a week.

• Get a flu shot. Think of it as your secret weapon during flu season. It's approved for almost everyone older than 6six months. Consult your doctor to see if the whole family should be vaccinated.

FIGHT GERMS

When you keep germs away during cold and flu season, you can lower your odds of getting sick. Try these simple habits to help avoid stuffy noses and sore throats:

• Wash your hands. And talk to your children about why it's important to wash theirs. A typical hand washing — before a meal, after going to the bathroom, or anytime you cough, sneeze, or blow your nose — should last 20 seconds. It's roughly the time it takes to sing Happy Birthday twice in your head.

• Bring backup. Try sticking a bottle of hand sanitizer in your purse to fight germs when you are on the go.

• Clean your desk. It's a hot spot for germs at the office. Invest in some disinfectant wipes and clean your desk, keyboard, mouse, and phone frequently.

BE PREPARED FOR COLD AND FLU SYMPTOMS

Despite your best efforts, it can be tough to make it through cold and flu season without anyone in the family getting sick. Stock up on the essentials such as Vicks® NyQuil®, Vicks VapoDrops™, and Puffs Plus® with the Scent of Vicks.

Varsity sports

UBC to announce results of its sport review

The University of British Columbia will announce the final outcome of its controversial varsity sport review at a press conference Friday.

Last month, the school named 16 men's and women's teams that retained their varsity status, however, 13 teams did not make the cut at that time. Coaches for those programs left out of the varsity program in January had to conduct a five-year plan for the sport review advisory team.

UBC president Stephen Toope and vice-president of students Louise Cowin are listed as the speakers at the press conference. Managing director of athletics and recreation Ashley Howard and a member of the sport review assessment team are also going to be on hand.

Among the teams left out of varsity in January was men's hockey, a program that has formed a strong bond with the Vancouver Canucks, especially during the lockout. Recently, members of the UBC men's hockey team have taken part in Canucks practices at Rogers Arena, when there weren't enough NHL players due to injuries or travelling back from Sochi.

Canucks coach John Tortorella has been in communication with members of the Thunderbirds coaching staff, and the NHL organization has publicly lent its support behind that team.

The teams that do not qualify for varsity status will be bumped down to a club level. CAM TUCKER/METRO

Kesler denies he requested a trade

NHL. Canucks' second-line centre the focal point of trade talks after Wednesday report

CAM TUCKER
cam.tucker@metronews.ca

Ryan Kesler, the focus of rampant trade talks, said a report Wednesday stating he requested to be dealt out of Vancouver is "completely false."

Kesler, the 29-year-old centre who is in the fourth year of a six-year contract worth a cap hit of $5 million per season, took part in a full team practice Thursday at Rogers Arena, and spoke to reporters afterward.

His response to the report falls in line with what his agent, Kurt Overhardt, told various media outlets Wednesday evening.

"I don't want to talk about this after today and I don't want my teammates to talk about this," said Kesler, who missed Wednesday's win over the St. Louis Blues because of a hand injury suffered in the preliminary round of the Sochi Olympics.

"I don't want to be a distraction. We have 21 games to make the playoffs and that's the main focus and that's what the focus should be on."

The National Hockey League's trade deadline is on March 5.

TVA Sports reported on Wednesday that Ryan Kesler requested to be traded out of Vancouver. Kesler denied doing so on Thursday. MARTIN ROSE/GETTY IMAGES

Kesler, Vancouver's first-round pick in the 2003 NHL Draft, said he was happy to be a member of the Canucks.

"Yeah, I'm happy. I love my teammates, I love the city. My son was born here," he said.

Kesler also has a no-trade clause that kicked in last season. He was asked about the possibility of him waiving his no-trade clause if the club approached him with an offer.

"I don't like to comment on 'what-ifs.' They (the club) haven't and I don't even want to think about that," he said.

Louis Jean of Quebec-based TVA Sports first reported via Twitter Kesler had requested a trade, as far back as the start of the season. He took to social media again Thursday, writing he stood "100% behind" what he reported.

There was another report that Kesler had told people after the bronze-medal game that he wanted out of Vancouver.

"I never commented to anybody that I wanted out."

Robinson Cano returns to the dugout after leaving a spring-training game in the third inning on Thursday.
LISA BLUMENFELD/GETTY IMAGES

Cano singles on first pitch as a Mariner

Spring training.
Former Yankee helps new Seattle squad take out the Padres 7-1

Robinson Cano didn't want to wait. One pitch was good enough to get his Seattle Mariners career started.

"I don't want to go out there and take a pitch. I want to see how I feel," Cano said. "Maybe from now on I'll take a pitch."

Cano lined a single into centre field on the first pitch he saw in a Seattle uniform, part of a two-run first inning that sent new manager Lloyd McClendon and the Mariners over the San Diego Padres 7-1 on Thursday in a Cactus League opener.

Good fit?

"It feels good and I know my swing is there. From now on I have to be patient."
Robinson Cano of the Seattle Mariners

Cano drew the loudest ovation of the day when he was introduced, then got his hit against Eric Stults. The All-Star left the Yankees in the off-season and signed a $240-million US, 10-year contract with the Mariners.

Cano played three innings. He walked on four pitches in the third before being lifted for a pinch runner. He had two assists playing at second base.

Cano's one-out single in the first put runners on the corners. Logan Morrison scored Kyle Seager with a sacrifice fly and Cano raced home when Justin Smoak doubled into the right-centre field gap. Cano and Smoak spent time on a practice field earlier this week working on Smoak's swing.

"That was a beautiful swing," Cano said, adding that if the switch-hitting Smoak keeps his hand inside while batting right-hander, "you will see the difference this season."

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
As mind planet Mercury moves in your favour again today your attitude will change for the better and you will be more upbeat about your hopes. Anything is possible if you want it enough.

♉ Taurus

Keep telling yourself that you have what it takes. If you say it enough, you will start to believe it and when that happens, all sorts of doors will suddenly open to you.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
If you have something to say you know isn't going to please some people, say it now. Don't worry about the consequences. Your job is to call it as you see it, and you see more clearly than most.

♋ Cancer

Be on the lookout for money-making opportunities but don't go rushing after them the moment you spot them. As Mercury, planet of intellect and communication, turns direct again today you can afford to take your time.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
A loved one will speak their mind today and what they have to say will shock you. You never realized they could be so passionate, or so angry. Well, now you know, so what are you going to do about it?

♍ Virgo

It may annoy you that someone is saying untrue things. But the best approach is to pretend that you have not noticed and that you agree with every word they say. Then prove them wrong.

♐ Sagittarius

Now that Mercury, planet of communication, is moving in your favour again, you will find it easy to express yourself. But don't let everyone know what is going on in your head.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
What seems extraordinary to you may be an everyday occurrence to other people, so let your mind be open to all possibilities. It doesn't, of course, mean you have to agree with them.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Any self-doubts you have will start to fade today and with luck will be swept away by tomorrow's new moon. People expect you to be positive in your views and don't want to disappoint them.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Mercury ends its retrograde phase and your self-belief will soar. With a new moon and a wonderful Sun-Jupiter link over the next 48 hours, this could be one of the best weekends of the year. SALLY BROMPTON
